Lúcio Lara Santos
Editor-in-Chief

Editorial

Dear Readers,

Revista Portuguesa de Cirurgia is a peer-reviewed journal dedicated to publishing high-quality research articles that facilitate the dissemination of knowledge and significant concepts in the comprehensive advancement of surgical studies.

Our mission is to showcase cutting-edge and innovative clinical practices across diverse interdisciplinary surgical domains, ensuring the dissemination of the latest advancements in the field.

In 2023, we invested substantial effort in securing the acceptance of our journal by PubMed Central (PMC), a freely accessible digital repository that archives open-access full-text scholarly articles published in biomedical and life sciences journals, serving as a major research database. To meet the criteria, articles had to be crafted in English, adhering to the stringent recommendations of both the journal and PubMed Central. The contributions of our editors and reviewers played a pivotal role in achieving this milestone.

In 2024, we are dedicated to enhancing the proficiency of Revista Portuguesa de Cirurgia. Our goal is to collaborate with the General Surgery Specialty Board, the Organization of Surgical Residents, and Surgical Services to increase article submissions. We aspire to open Revista Portuguesa de Cirurgia to authors and reviewers from the global community, making every effort to minimize response and publication times.

This journal stands as a collective asset for all surgical residents, surgeons, and researchers, serving as a valuable tool for disseminating knowledge in the fields of surgery, biomedical, and life sciences.

Greetings,